18. The Chapter on Impurities

- 235. You are now like a withered leaf, and the messengers of death stand ready for you;
You stand at the threshold of departure, yet you have no provisions for the journey.
- 236. So make an island for yourself, strive quickly, be wise;
With stain blown off, without blemish, you will reach the divine noble plane.
- 237. Your life has been brought to its end now, you have set out towards the presence of Yama;
There is no resting place for you in between, and you have no provisions for the journey.
- 238. So make an island for yourself, strive quickly, be wise;
With stain blown off, without blemish, you will not again undergo birth and ageing.
- 239. Gradually the wise one, little by little, moment by moment,
Like a smith with silver, should blow away one's own stain.
- 240. Just as rust arisen from iron, having arisen from it, eats that very iron;
So one's own actions lead to an unfortunate realm one who indulges too much.
- 241. Non-recitation is the stain of spells, inactivity is the stain of houses;
Idleness is the stain of beauty, negligence is the stain of one who guards.
- 242. "Misconduct is the stain of a woman, stinginess is the stain of one who gives;
Evil mental states are indeed stains, in this world and the next.
- 243. More staining than those stains, ignorance is the supreme stain;
Having abandoned this stain, be stainless, monks.
- 244. Easy is the life for one who is shameless, bold as a crow, a backbiter,
A braggart, reckless, defiled in living.
- 245. Hard to live for one with shame, always seeking what is pure;
Not sluggish, not impudent, living purely, seeing clearly.
- 246. "Whoever kills a living being, and speaks lying;
Takes what is not given in the world, and goes to another's wife.
- 247. And the drinking of spirits and liquor, whatever man engages in;

Right here in this world, he uproots himself.

- 248. Thus, good man, know this: those of bad character are unrestrained;
Let not greed and what is not the Teaching afflict you for a long time unto suffering.
- 249. People give according to their faith, according to their confidence;
Whoever therein becomes ashamed regarding others' drink and food;
He, neither by day nor by night, attains concentration.
- 250. For one in whom this is cut off, destroyed at the root, uprooted;
He indeed, by day or by night, attains concentration.
- 251. There is no fire like lust, there is no grip like hate;
There is no net like delusion, there is no river like craving.
- 252. Easy to see is the fault of others, but one's own is difficult to see;
For he winnows the faults of others just as chaff;
But one's own he conceals, like a cheat, the fraudulent gambler.
- 253. For one observing others' faults, always intending on finding fault;
His mental corruptions grow, he is far from the elimination of mental corruptions.
- 254. Just as in space there is no track, there is no ascetic outside;
People are fond of obsession, the Truth-finders are without obsession.
- 255. Just as in space there is no track, there is no ascetic outside;
Activities are not eternal, there is no perturbation for the Buddhas.

The Chapter on Stains is concluded as eighteenth.
