3. The Chapter on Mind

- 33. The mind is agitated and fickle, difficult to guard and difficult to restrain;
The wise one makes it straight, as a fletcher does an arrow.
- 34. Like a fish thrown on dry ground, pulled out from its watery abode;
This mind trembles, to abandon the realm of Māra.
- 35. Of the mind difficult to control, quick, alighting wherever it wishes;
The taming of the mind is good, a tamed mind brings happiness.
- 36. Very difficult to see, very subtle, falling wherever it wishes;
The wise one should guard the mind, a guarded mind brings happiness.
- 37. Far-wandering, travelling alone, bodiless, dwelling in the cave;
Those who will restrain the mind, will be freed from Māra's bondage.
- 38. For one of unsettled mind, not understanding the Good Teaching,
For one of wavering confidence, wisdom is not fulfilled.
- 39. For one whose mind is not filled with desire, whose heart is not struck;
For one who has abandoned merit and evil, there is no fear for the vigilant one.
- 40. Having understood this body to be like a pot, having established this mind to be like a citadel;
One should fight Māra with the weapon of wisdom, and should protect what is conquered, being without attachment.
- 41. Before long, indeed, this body will lie upon the earth;
Discarded, devoid of consciousness, like a useless log.
- 42. Whatever an enemy might do to an enemy, or else a foe to a foe;
A wrongly directed mind can do worse to him than that.
- 43. Not that could mother or father do, nor even other relatives;
A rightly directed mind can do better for him than that.

The Chapter on the Mind is concluded as third.
