6. The Chapter on the Wise

- 76. Like one who reveals treasures, should one see a fault-finder;
One who speaks reprovably, intelligent - such a wise person one should associate with;
For one associating with such a person, it is better, not worse.
- 77. One should exhort and instruct, and restrain from what is vile;
For he is dear to the good, but disagreeable to the bad.
- 78. One should not associate with evil friends, one should not associate with wicked men;
One should associate with good friends, one should associate with the highest of men.
- 79. One who drinks the Teaching sleeps happily, with a clear mind;
In the Teaching proclaimed by the Noble One, the wise person always delights.
- 80. Irrigators lead water, fletchers straighten the arrow;
Carpenters straighten wood, the wise tame themselves.
- 81. Just as a rock, one solid mass, is not moved by the wind;
So the wise do not waver amidst blame and praise.
- 82. Just as a lake deep, clear, undisturbed;
So having heard the teachings, the wise become serene.
- 83. Good persons indeed give up everywhere, the peaceful do not prattle desiring sensual pleasures;
Whether touched by happiness or by suffering, the wise do not show high and low states.
- 84. Not for one's own sake, not for another's sake, one should not wish for a son,
nor wealth, nor a country;
One should not wish for one's own success not by rule; such a one would be moral, wise, and righteous.
- 85. "Few are those among human beings, those people going to the far shore;
And this other generation just runs along the shore.
- 86. But those who practise in accordance with the Teaching, in the Teaching well proclaimed;
Those people will go beyond, the realm of Death so hard to cross.

- 87. "Having abandoned the dark phenomenon, the wise one should develop the bright;
Having come from home to homelessness, in seclusion where delight is hard.
- 88. There one should wish for delight, having abandoned sensual pleasures, one who owns nothing;
The wise one should purify oneself of the mental defilements of the mind.
- 89. "Those whose minds are rightly well developed in the factors of enlightenment;
Who delight in the relinquishment of grasping, by non-clinging;
Those who have eliminated the mental corruptions, brilliant, they are quenched in the world."

The Chapter on the Wise is concluded as sixth.
