67. "I do not, monks, perceive any other single phenomenon by which unarisen wholesome mental states arise, or arisen unwholesome mental states decline, as does, monks, wise attention. 68. "I do not, monks, perceive any other single phenomenon by which unarisen unwholesome mental states arise, or arisen wholesome mental states decline, as does, monks, lack of full awareness. For one not fully aware, monks, unarisen unwholesome mental states arise, and arisen wholesome mental states decline." The eighth.

69. "I do not, monks, perceive any other single phenomenon by which unarisen wholesome mental states arise, or arisen unwholesome mental states decline, as does, monks, full awareness. For the fully aware, monks, unarisen wholesome mental states arise, and arisen unwholesome mental states decline." The ninth.
