7. The Chapter on the Worthy Ones

- 90. For one who has completed the journey, free from sorrow, free everywhere;
For one who has abandoned all mental knots, no fever is found.
- 91. The mindful ones strive, they do not delight in an abode;
Like swans leaving a lake, they give up home after home.
- 92. Those who have no accumulation, who have fully understood food;
Emptiness and signless, deliverance is their resort;
Like birds in space, their destination is hard to trace.
- 93. One whose mental corruptions are utterly eliminated, and who is independent regarding food;
Emptiness and signless, deliverance is whose resort;
Like birds in space, his track is hard to trace.
- 94. Whose faculties have reached serenity, like horses well-tamed by a charioteer;
Who has abandoned conceit, who is without mental corruptions, even the gods envy such a one.
- 95. Like the earth, he is not hostile, like a gate-post, such a one of good conduct;
Like a lake free from mud, for such a one there is no wandering in the round of rebirths.
- 96. Peaceful is his mind, peaceful are his speech and action;
To one completely liberated through final knowledge, to one at peace, to such a one.
- 97. Whoever is faithless and knows the uncreated, and is a cutter of connection;
One whose opportunity is destroyed, who has vomited hope, he indeed is the highest man.
- 98. Whether in a village or in the wilderness, in a low place or on high ground;
Wherever Worthy Ones dwell, that place is pleasant.
- 99. Delightful are the forests, where ordinary people do not delight;
Those without lust will delight there, they are not seekers of sensual pleasures.

The Chapter on the Worthy One is concluded as seventh.
